Most of the injured were mill employes on their way to work. The trains, running forty miles an hour rounded a curve from opposite directions almost simultaneously, and the crush was inevitable. The steel cars buckled, but did not telescope. This fact doubtless saved many lives.

A hotel near the scene and a number of residences near-by were thrown open for use as emergency hospitals. Many ambulances and a corps of physicians were summoned to the scene.

The Pennsylvania Railroad issued a statement saying that the accident had been caused, so far as could be determined, by the negligence of the operator at Whitestone Junction, who allowed the train bound for New York to leave the double track before the other train had cleared.
